

Simple layering

Shoots are bent over to the ground in early spring or fall. A second bend is made in branch a short distance from tip, which is covered with soil and held in place with wire or wood stakes. The stem is sometimes injured at the underground section which stimulates rooting. Includes notching, bending, wiring, or girdling.

Roots form on the buried part of the shoot near the bend.

The rooted layer is removed from the parent plant.